Johann Strauss (Sohn)

Johann Baptist Strauss was born 200 years ago on October 25, 1825 in St. Ulrich near Vienna, today part of Vienna-Neubau. († June 3, 1899 in Vienna) Strauss was an Austrian-German conductor and composer and was internationally renowned as the "Waltz King". He is also referred to as Johann Strauss (son) to distinguish him from his father of the same name.

His father Johann Strauss originally planned a career as a civil servant for "Johann II", but his mother Anna, who soon became a single mother and did everything she could to take revenge for her husband's infidelity by supporting her son, made it possible for Johann junior to study music with Joseph Drechsler, among others.

Johann junior had already composed his first waltz at the age of six; he had taken violin lessons in secret.

His very first performance at the Casino Dommayer on October 15, 1844 in the Viennese suburb of Hietzing, an entertainment venue known throughout the region, was a huge success. Tours initially took him with his own orchestra throughout the monarchy. After the death of his father in 1849, he took over his father's orchestra and merged it with his own. From 1856 to 1865, he traveled to Pavlovsk near St. Petersburg every summer at the invitation of the Russian railroad company. He not only gave guest performances there. He also created many new works, which he then added to his repertoire. Strauss also had a love affair with the Russian composer Olga Smirnitskaya. Further tours took him through Europe and to North America.
